PUPILS PRESENT NOVEL PROGRAM

High school students of Daly City can produce artistic dramatic programs as well as exhibit fine scholastic records and football superiority.

This ability was admirably shown in the performance given by members of the art and library practice classes in the high school auditorium on Tuesday evening, November 21, before an exceptionally large audience of interested parents and other friends of education. The program was one unit in the year's project of the local Parent-Teachers' Association, the object of which is to stimulate interest among parents by demonstrating just what the different departments in the high school are offering.

The unique manner in which these students demonstrated what they are learning in art and library practice was the outstanding note of the entertainment. Seeing was believing that local art students made, dressed and manipulated dolls for a marionette play, staged it and produced it with exceptional skill. From beginning to end it was delightful in its mimicry. Mrs. Willoughby, the art teacher, showed fine artistic ability in her direction of the whole play and is to be congratlated for giving the parents a real treat.

The pageant presented by the library students immediately following the marionettes was none the less clever entertainment as well as an example of valuable educational opportunity. Miss Gibbins, the librarian, is the author of the pagenant, which is entitled "The Story Told by Library Shelves." Through her piece of work she gives one of the most graphic methods for instructing students in the use of the library yet devised. This method is dramatization, by which the library, with its vast resources, is made the vital, attractive center of the whole educational oarganization that it should be.

The program was of further educational value since it gave opportunity for correlation among several departments of tthe school. In this connection, acknowledgment of assistance goes to the home economics instructor and her students for making costumes, and to the teachers and students of the commercial department for printing the programs. All of the art work for the entire progam was done by students in Mrs. Willoughby's art classes. Further appreciation goes to The Emporium, San Francisco, for the use of the toy susension bridge, and to the United Air Lines, Inc., for the model airplane, both of which were used as properties in the pageant.

Following is the program as presented, with a list of the students who participated:

VETS PLAN RELIEF FOR LARGE GPOUP

The San Mateo County United War Veterans' Council held a very busy meeting Friday night, November 17, in Veterans' Hall, Redwood City, with A. J. Rapsey presiding. A ritual for the organization will be adopted at the next meeting.

President Rapsey gave a full report on the new relief set up, informing the large group how needy and deserving veterans may obtain aid. A veteran need not belong to any organization, but should he be in need he should contact the service officer of any organization. Dr. John N. Blood of the County Council American Legion, William Augustus of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, A. J. Dempsey of the United Spanish War Veterans, and Harry Sinclair of the Disabled American Veterans, are the key men to contact.

Nomination of officers for service during 1934 were made as follows: For President, W. H. Augustus and Dr. J. N. Blood; Treasurer, H. J. Allen; Sergeant-at-Arms, E. J. Dickinson. Election will be held at the next meeting, which will be in Redwood City, on Friday, December 8.

R. A. Rapsey and Charles Frey, both well known attorneys, were appointed on the legal aid committee, and they are ready to aid and assist veterans who may need legal advice, particularly on foreclosure proceedings.

Practically every Chapter, Camp and Post of all veteran's organizations in the county were represented.

DALY CITY STUDENTS VISIT MUIR WOODS

On Friday, November 17, the eighth grade of Jefferson school, accompanied by their teacher, Miss Traynor, enjoyed a pleasant trip to Muir Woods. After an exhilarating hike and a luscious luncheon, the class avowed that such outings should happen more frequently.

On Wednesday, November 15, the Crocker and Jefferson schools played an interesting handball game. The Crocker boys played valiantly, but they were far outclassed by the superior playing of the opposing team.

In the first doubles, Aladeno Sereni and Frank Lucchesi won against Alton Benner and Nicholas Glavich, with a score of 11-0. Nicholas Perata and David Gaggero won the second doubles from Roy Wilson and Stanley Simpson, with a score of 11-9.

In the singles, Aladeno Sereni won from Chester Mount with a score of 11-2. Frank Lucchesi was the victor in the second singles with scores of 11-1. In the third singles, Lawrence Nannini bested Alton Benner, with a score of 11-1.

Crocker P. T. A. Holds Interesting Meeting

An exceptionally interesting meeting was held by the Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association last Tuesday evening. The occasion was Fathers' night, and a goodly number of fathers were present. The special invitation to "Dad", asking him to bring mother, was quite successful.

The teachers of Crocker school cooperated with the parents by being present in a body. The Glee Club girls, under the able leadership of Miss Mosconi, sang three lovely numbers, and the audience was agreeably surprised by a beautiful duet rendered by two of the girls, June Archer and Mary Nunan.

Mrs. I. O. Schmelzle, of Balboa high school, spoke on "Russia," a subject which was enjoyed by the "Dads" especially. Mr. R. L. Crane gave an address on "The American Legion." Mr. Chesney and Mr. Augustien spoke on the great need we have for safe schools in place of the three we have which are firetraps. Mrs. Pauw sang two numbers.

At the end of the program, some of the ladies of the executive board gave a clever little skit as a take-off on an executive board meeting, which left everyone in excellent spirits.

The committee served refreshments at the close of the meeting.

Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association wants to thank everyone who participated in making the meeting a success, and hopes that a great many of the hundred or more present will attend the next meeting, the second Tuesday in December.

The Past Presidents of El Carmelo Parlor, N. D. G. W., held their regular monthly meeting at the new home of Mrs. Alice Mathias Oldham, on Twenty-sixth avenue, San Francisco, on Friday evening, November 10. After the usual social meeting, dainty refreshments were served at a beautifully decorated table.

HILLCREST CIRCLE MEMBERS HAVE INTERESTING MEETING

On November 13, No. 143, of the U. A. O. D. of Daly City enjoyed the most interesting and inspiring meeting held in many months.

It was the annual official gathering of the Grand Arch Druidess and her official family.

The drill team did their work under the supervision of their captain, Katherine Foreman, in a perfect manner. The program was very interesting and the gifts tendered to the Grand Arch Druidess was planned in a most effective way by Madaline Fellows, Grand Auditor. There were twenty candidates added to the membership list.

The social hall was decorated in a beautiful manner. Turkey and everything that goes with it were served under the careful direction of Mrs. L. Lombard and her assistants. There were 150 guests served and every part of the county and state was represented.

The following Grand Officers were called on to respond and they all extended thanks and good wishes for the welfare of Hillcrest Circle: Grand Arch Druidess Carrie Kelleher, Grand Secretary Louise Zazzi, Grand First Bard Anna Armondi, Grand Second Bard Mary Neil, Grand Guardian Sadie Merjer, Grand Sentinel Celine Smith, Grand Trustees Katherine Kennedy and Rowena Lucass, Auditors Minnie Lino and our own Madaline Fellows, Past Grand Arch Druidess Sarah Armstrong, Past Grand Arch Druidess May Lane, Past Grand Noble Arch Brother Stark, of San Francisco.

Mrs. Sisevich Taken to Prison

Mrs. Gladys Sisevich, San Mateo housewife, convicted of manslaughter, was taken to the Tehachapi women's prison last Monday afternoon. She faces a term of from one to ten years, to run concurrently, for the deaths of Mrs. Addalyne Lyons and her 8-month-old baby, who were run down and killed by Mrs. Sisevich's automobile in East Palo Alto, July 20.

DISTANCE STARS CLASH TOMORROW

Distance stars—thirteen strong—will clash Saturday, November 25, at Tanforan in the $3,000 added Pleasanton Handicap at a mile and an eighth.

The Pleasanton Handicap is second in added money value only to the $5,000 added San Francisco Handicap, December 16. The stake Saturday will mark the fifth in a series of eleven at the forty day fall meeting at Tanforan.

Bobsled, Texas Derby winner and one of the outstanding handicap stars in fall training, is slated to make his debut at Tanforan in the Pleasanton. This dazzling three-year-old is owned by Mrs. A. M. Creech. He will run coupled with Guardrail as the Creech entry. Bobsled has been showing fine form in early morning trials and is right on edge for the engagement.

Teralice, the "jinx" horse of the meeting, will try again here. Teralice was second in the Inaugral, Burlingame and Berkeley Handicaps. He will run coupled with Sidney Grant as the Abe Bartelstein entry. Sidney Grant will be making his first out of the season, and he loves this distance. The farther the better.

Roy Painter, the English importation, is being groomed for this stake. By Gainsborough out of Campbell Kid, he has perhaps as fine blood lines as any thoroughbred in the United States, but to date he has proved a disappointment on the racetrack.

Bahamas, a stakes winner at previous Tanforan meetings, has been nominated. Kneehigh, an Easterner, will match strides in the stake. Boardwalker, winner of the Inaugural Handicap, will try her luck here. Bonny Grafton, which captured the Community Chest, is slated to go into action again. Seth's Hope will take a shot at the stake. He has a San Francisco Handicap victory, earned several seasons ago, to his credit.

Prince Pest, Seguro and Parawick round out the list of nominations.

GOLD PROSPECTS DELIGHT EDITORS

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

California newspapers are giving much space these days to the subject of the mining of gold, and naturally most of the "stories" have to do with the developments in this state, famous for many years for its output of the yellow metal. It will take a long period to find and remove the golden treasure still secreted by Mother Earth in this commonwealth, even the most conservative estimate.

Walter W. Bradley, state mineralogist, states California has yielded approximately $1,800,000,000 worth of gold since the days of '49, and that there remains about $1,500,000,000 which may require one hundred years to find.

In Harry Hammond's breezy publication, the Byron Times, we read that old methods of the days of '49 are being replaced with modern scientific practices, backed by well financed organizations, and millions that will be realized were left behind as the result of wasteful and careless procedure of the early days.

As to tre effect of the high price for the newly mined gold, Editor Hammond says:

"Many workings, abandoned due to the fact that low grade ore could not be mined successfully at previous prices, are being re-opened under the new conditions. According to reports compiled at Sacramento, approximately 22,000 men are working the gold-bearing regions of California since the rise in the price of gold."

Enthusiasm is high in the north over the bright future visioned as a direct result of the advanced price of gold. Plans are under way for extensive development work in the winter and next season. Many mining men who usually come out of the northern districts for the winter will stay on their properties and work them.

In an interview in the Alaska Weekly, which keeps in close touch with the news of the northern territory, James P. Daly, veteran agent of the Alaska Steamship Company at Nome, on arriving in Seattle, said:

"Next season will witness a further revival of mining operations, particularly placer claims, if the present gold price holds to that level. Claims to have been too lean to mine under the old gold price have been opened up and dredging companies are negotiating for large areas, which will be placed in operation in the spring. The large companies are extending their work and prospecting will be active this winter."

The Seward peninsula experienced the dryest season in years, but the section produced $2,000,000 in gold at the new price. On its final voyage of the season from Northwestern Alaska to Seattle, the steamship Victoria brought $840,000 worth of new gold.

During the voyage from Nome the volue of the gold bullion was enhanced considerably by the rising price at the time. Certificates were issued to the owners, who were paid in debenture notes of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The notes may be exchanged for cash or held until they mature in February.

Reports reaching Vancouver are to the effect that large amounts of British capital will be available next year for investment in Canada. That means a flow of money for development of mining properties.

Valuable discoveries are reported in the Glacier Gulch gold district, near Smithers. Ore valued at $20 a ton has been mined. A small aerial train is being installed to carry the ore down Hudson's Bay Mountain, where the principal property is located.

Production at Bralorne Mines will soon be $105,000 monthly, according to the latest estimate. On account of the high price of gold about 55 per cent premium is added. It is expected the profit per year will be about $1,173,000.

Proclamation Hails Passing of Dark Days

In a proclamation expressing his gratefulness for "the passing of the dark days," President Roosevelt calls on the nation to observe Thanksgiving, November 30.

The document, free of tthe usual "whereases" and "be it resolved," cited the courage of the pioneers of the land, pointed to a new spirit of dependence on one another, friendship between capital and labor, and asked "for a clearer knowledge by all nations that we seek no conquests."

BOARD APPROVES RELIEF PROJECTS

At the meeting of the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday, work relief projects at Burlingame schools, totaling more than $4,000, were approved by the board. An expenditure of more than $16,000 for deepening a South San Francisco drainage canal also was approved by the board.

The supervisors voted to aid the attempt of South San Francisco to have the underpass on the Bayshore highway there widened.

The board ordered the purchasing agent to call for bids on a garage to be used for housing county equipment.

A resolution urging the federal government to lend aid on the development of the Redwood City harbor was adopted by the board.

Two weeks more will elapse before the San Mateo county supervisors will bring the health board to its standard membership. The board accepted the resignations of A. W. Deuel and Mrs. Harry Dana as members of the board. However, the board failed to accept the recommendations of County Executive Walter T. Kellogg and delayed the appointment of two new members for two weeks.

As the result of the Brisbane petition, the board agreed to visit Brisbane Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock and make a survey of the roads there.

The board agreed to move the office of Dr. Harold E. Morrison, county health director, to the county juvenile home from the Community hospital. Dr. Morrison offered no protest.

Fatally injured when struck by a delivery truck, Adolf Hartzell, 60, also known as Adolf Buck, of Elder avenue, Millbrae, died Monday at Mills Memorial hospital. Carl Roch, 18, driver of the truck, told police he was delivering papers and had driven to the curb at Willow and Chadburn avenues, Millbrae, when the vehicle ran over something. He stopped and found Hartzell lying in the street.

Big Game at Stanford Scheduled for Saturday

Lucky is the football enthusiast who possesses a ticket for the Big Game at Stanford, Palo Alto, tomorrow, Saturday, November 25. And while the odds favor Stanford to win, even the Palo Alto enthusiasts admit that a close game may be expected.

They're playing for a probable Coast championship. They're playing for the right to represent the West at the Rose Bowl. And they're playing to beat each other, the most important object of all.

Over 90,000 people are expected to crowd the big bowl to witness the clash between the traditional rivals, and every spectator will be rooting hard for his favorite team.

Sophomore Bobby Grayson, turf-burning hero of the storming of Troy, after a week out of play, has returned in perfect condition to lead the Indian attack.

Dr. Fritz Roth, responsible for the team's condition, announces that every man, absolutely every man, will be in top form to strike at the Bears.

If Stanford has her great Bobby Grayson back, California has her Floyd Blower, side arm flinger, spectacular catcher, and line-running star, who went twelve yards through St. Mary's goal line defence in the last seconds to down the Galloping Gauls.

Blower is back, and on Blower, in conjunction with the veteran Arleigh Williams, California depends to match Stanford's great speed.

It will be the game of the year for many of the spectators, all of whom will hope that the best team wins—and that the winning team is their team.

The members of the Veteran Firemen's Association of Daly City will hold their annual whist at the City Hall Auditorium this Friday evening, November 24.

Twenty-five of the young members of El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., and their friends enjoyed a small social whist game at the home of Grand Outside Sentinel Alice Oldham, on Tuesday evening, November 14. The proceeds realized were turned over to the social fund of the Parlor. Refreshments were served at the card game.

At its meeting held on Wednesday evening, November 15, El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., honored its latest bride, Mrs. Dorothy Anderson Barnhill. Mrs. Barnhill is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Alice Anderson, a very active worker in the Parlor. On behalf of the Parlor, Mrs. Julia Rome, President, presented Mrs. Barnhill a beautiful orchid and green blanket and wished the newly married couple much happiness in their wedded life. Mrs. Barnhill is now making her home in Vallejo.

An economist is a fellow who has a new theory whereby he hopes to repeal the stubborn old law of supply and demand.

JACK DEMPSEY WILL HAVE RACING STABLE

Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight champion of the world, intends to re-enter racing with a stable of his own, he announced the other day at the Tanforan track. He plans to have a stable in action at Tanforan next spring. Johnny Coburn, who formerly trained Dempsey's horses, has been engaged for the post again.

Dempsey raced his string several years ago under the nom de course of the Canyon Stable. He owned the fast sprinter Doctor Wilson, Old Kickapoo, and other good ones. Doctor Wilson was a stakes winner at Tijuana, Mexico.

Jack and his recent bride, Hannah Williams of musical comedy fame, have been constant visitors at the forty day fall meeting at Tanforan. He always has been a devotee of racing and his wife also is an ardent fan.

The horses which he will purchase have not been selected. However, he plans to get some good ones together for the spring campaign.

Joe Benjamin, rated one of the best lightweights in the world several years ago, is another boxing celebrity who has turned to racing as a sport. He has a stable at Tanforan, and raced at Longacres, Seattle, recently.

Dempsey is a familiar figure at all of the major tracks in the United States. Whenever he gets a chance, he takes an afternoon off and watches the thoroughbreds run.

Although the Manassa Mauler has been out of the ring for several years, he received a larger ovation from the fans at Tanforan in the Jack Dempsey Handicap than any other celebrity introduced at the course.

With Advances Certain Now is the Time to Buy

"In very line of industry and trade higher wages are operating to increase production costs. Things are going to be more valuable than money, and ot such a time free buying is the part of prudence.

"There is in this country an enormous latent buying power. Alongside it is an even more enormous latent demand for things. Our clothes are shabby, our automobiles rattle, our houses need painting. We need nearly everything, and for four years we have been buying the very strvation minimum. We were afraid to buy because prices had steadily fallen and we were afaraid of losing our jobs. It was the thing to do in a downward spiral. But it is not the thing to do when everything is going in the other way. Lower prices, unemployment, save. Higher prices, reemployment, buy. That is good sense and good business."—General Johnson.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

New York.—Just a few yarns today. I will start off with Carl Laemmle. He's supposed to be hard of hearing. The qualification is used advisedly since there is a belief that his deafness affects him greatest when he doesn't care to hear. A case in point was a recent poker game in which he engaged with Sam Ross, his secretary, Sam Jacobson, his general manager and a couple of other friends. Along came a hand on which Mr. Laemmle bet with enthusiasm. The others stuck along but there was no Laemmle discouragement whatsoever. Finally one of the players remarked in a casual tone, "Wonder what the old man's got, anyway?" "It will cost you just two bucks to find out," came the quick reply.

Then there is Oliver Herford, who with Daniel Frohman, is said to be the last addict of the old 4-inch stiff collar. Mr. Herford is also hard of hearing. It is related of him that he is fond of playing a certain game, his opponent being some one for whom he does not care particularly. According to the report, he carries on a long conversation with that person and never hears a single word!

Having passed Owen Davis on Broadway up near Fiftieth street a few minutes ago, a yarn about him told me by Ray Henderson comes to mind. A new Davis drama (not "Jezebel"), was about to be given a preliminary production by a New England stock company. A reporter asked Davis if the play was g. d. "No," replied the playwright ironically, "it's just a little thing I tossed off in a couple of days." And with considerable chagrin and annoyance, Davis read his own words printed verbatim the following Sunday in an important New York newspaper.

Then there was that builder who died a short time ago and was buried in a magnificent mausoleum of his own designing—a mausoleum in which is reflected the spirit of the skyscrapers which are his monuments within the city. A few weeks later, a merchant who specializes in cheaper dresses showed drawings of a mausoleum to friends, saying that he believed in being prepared for the future. One of the friends remarked that there was a resemblance to the tomb of the builder. "Yes," replied the merchant, "but I've improved on it."

Just happened to think about Peter Bill Sarver's peerless mouser. The other night, the man of the house was awakened by what sounded like a heavy tread overhead. The noise was all the more disquieting as the bungalow had been unoccupied over the week-end. So, with considerable misgivings, an investigation was made. It was discovered that an intruding mouse had taken refuge in a heavy shoe and the thuds were caused by Peter slapping at it. The cat's fun was ended abruptly and again sleep came. But it was broken by more heavy thuds. The investigation disclosed the fact that another mouse had taken refuge in another shoe. Such a night!

Speaking of unhappy nights, there was the experience of the Fifth avenue resident who, awakened by a slight noise, saw in the dim light of his bedroom, a man making way with his clothing. Hopping out of bed, he leaped on the intruder's back—only to discover that it was merely his valet taking his suit down to be pressed. And now he's looking for a new man servant since the old one got so nussed up he not only quit but demanded—and obtained—$500 damages.

AMERICAN ANIMALS

JAGUAR

YOU see the largest feline here
In all the Western hemisphere.
Where Spanish speaking people are,
He's called el tee-gray or ha-gwar.

His mottled coat is sleek and shiny;
On neck and head the spots are tiny,
While on his back each big rosette
Is plainly marked, and black as jet.

He's greatly feared by everyone,
And blamed for deeds he's never done,
For when he meets a human being
His first and only thought is fleeing!

But he is fond of sheep and goats,
And has a taste for calves and shoats,
So ranchers hunt him high and low
From Argentine to Mexico.

Fifty Famous Frontiersmen

ELMO SCOTT WATSON

He Led Boone to Kentucky

ALL Americans know the name of Daniel Boone and most of them, no doubt, think of him as one of the first, if not the first, pioneer into the "Dark and Bloody Ground" of Kentucky. But how many of them have ever heard of the man who was most responsible for Boone's going there and who guided him to that alluring promised land?

John Finley, or Findlay, was that man's name and he was the son of Archibald Finley, who emigrated from County Armagh in Ireland to Bucks county, Pa., in 1734. When young John grew up he established himself as a trader and horse peddler at Carlisle, Pa., and in 1747 he was licensed as an Indian trader.

During the next eight years Finley carried on his trading expeditions into the West and in the autumn of 1752, with three or four companions, he descended the Ohio in a canoe as far as the falls at the present city of Louisville. From there they accompanied a party of Shawnees to their town near the present city of Winchester, Ky., and there from another party of traders Finley learned of the Great Warriors' Path.

After a series of adventures Finley returned to Pennsylvania and at the outbreak of the French and Indian war he enlisted as a wagoner in Braddock's army. Another wagoner in the same expedition was a young man named Daniel Boone and over the campfires of the campaign of 1755 young Boone was an eager listener to Finley's stirring tales of the hunter's paradise which he had visited beyond the mountains.

But, although Boone's imagination had been fired by Finley's narrative, nothing came of it until 1768. In that year the Pennsylvania trader, peddling his pins, needles, thread and Irish linens down in North Carolina, learned from some Pennsylvania settlers there that his old comrade-in-arms of the Braddock days was living on the Upper Yadkin, and immediately went to visit him.

Learning of Boone's failure to reach Kentucky by way of the difficult Big Sandy river route, Finley told him again of the Cumberland Gap route and again the Irishman's eloquent tongue poured into Boone's ears his tales of a country teeming with wild game. The result was that on May 1, 1769, with Finley as his guide, Boone, accompanied by four of his neighbors, began his historic journey and a few weeks later he stood in Cumberland Gap and looked down into the land of his dreams, the country with which his name was to be forever inseparably linked—"Kaintuckee."

Bill Tilghman, Frontier Marshal

"THOSE who live by the sword shall perish by the sword"—how true it was of so many of the famous frontiersmen, only, of course, the word "six-gun" must be substituted for "sword." It was true of peace officers as well as of outlaws. And what a queer turn of fate it was that one of the most famous of all the old-time frontier marshals should perish thus in a modern day when the old Wild West was but a memory. For, on November 1, 1924, when Bill Tilghman was shot down by a federal prohibition officer in the wide-open oil town of Cromwell, Okla., where the old-time marshal had been sent to curb liquor and gambling, it marked the end of a race of peace officers, the like of which probably will never be seen again in our history.

Born on the frontier of Iowa in 1854, Tilghman left home at the age of sixteen to seek adventure in southwest Kansas. He found it there as a buffalo hunter and as a scout in the Indian wars of 1874-75 and again in 1878. Next he became marshal of Dodge City, Kan., in the days when it was known far and wide as "wicked Dodge," and there he established a reputation for fearlessness and straight-shooting which remained with him to the end of his days. After three years as marshal he became chief deputy sheriff of Ford county, a job which he held for four years.

In 1889, when Oklahoma was opened to settlement, he joined the land rush and won a fine farm for himself. He was ready to settle down to a peaceful existence as a farmer but the new territory was becoming overrun with bad men of all kinds and again Tilghman was enlisted on the side of law and order, this time as a deputy United States marshal.

As deputy marshal he performed one of the greatest feats of his career—the single-handed capture of the notorious outlaw, Bill Doolin, whom he "brought back alive" when it would have been much easier to have killed him. And this was only one incident in his long career of law enforcement, from which he often retired but to which he was repeatedly called back—as marshal of Guthrie, as chief of police of Oklahoma City and as a county sheriff.

He has been called "the greatest man hunter the Southwest ever knew," "the only frontiersman who was constantly on the job for a generation and still lived" and "the last of that bulldog breed of old-time field marshals who risked and gave their lives to push back the borders of a wilderness."

PEANUT BRITTLE IS EASILY MADE

Give It a Try When Next You Make Candy at Home.

By EDITH M. BARBER

ONCE in a while we get the urge to make candy at home. There is just nothing else which will do, and so when the kitchen is clear of the other cooking we decide to make up a batch of candy. There is always the momentous decision of what kind shall it be? Fudge usually wins, but sometimes it will be taffy or butterscotch or peanut brittle.

Once in a while we go so far as to make fondant, but use it at once for cream wafers. It is only at holiday time that we go in seriously for making bonbons. Sometimes we dip the wafers in chocolate, and nothing is better than a chocolate mint or wintergreen cream wafer.

The easiest of all these candies to make is peanut brittle, which can be made instead of pecan or coconut or bran brittle by adding one of these in place of the peanuts. In following the recipe for the brittle be sure to stir the sugar over a low heat and to use a heavy frying pan, aluminum or iron or steel.

With all the other candies for which recipes are given here one point should be particularly considered. Crystals should not be allowed to form around the sides of the saucepan during the cooking. To prevent this stir the sugar with the liquid until it is absorbed. If you cover the pan for two or three minutes the steam will wash the sugar from the sides of the utensil and crystals are not as likely to form. If they do form wash them from the sides with a wet cloth wrapped around a fork.

The reason we are so fussy about a few crystals is because of a law of physics. When there is one crystal others are likely to follow it out of solution and we will have "sugary" candy. This prevents butterscotch from hardening and from being smooth; it keeps taffy from pulling and is bound to make grainy fudge and fondant.

In making fudge I find I get an always smooth and creamy product if I cook the chocolate with cold water until smooth and thick, which will be about at the boiling point. I then add the sugar and milk and go on in the usual way. It is interesting and inexplicable to find that when fudge is made this way we get the "soft ball," which is the test for length of time for cooking, about six degrees lower than when the chocolate is not cooked first. If you use a candy thermometer be sure to note the temperature, 228 degrees Fahrenheit, for this is of importance.

Quick cooling should be used for fudge. The saucepan should be set in cold water for two or three minutes until the sirup sticks to the bottom of the pan when it is stirred. Fudge made by this method may be put in the pan while it is still in a condition to be poured.

In making taffy and butterscotch the sirup should be poured into the pan quickly and the pans should not be scraped. Taffy should be cooled quickly by setting the pan in cold water and, as the edges harden, folding them in to the center. Pulling should be done lightly with the fingers, not with the whole hand. If you have ever been present at a children's candy pull you know the results of "hand" pulling. Pulling lightly with the fingers pulls in the air and makes a taffy delicate in texture and flavor. Of course this makes no difference to the small boys or girls who enjoy their own solid, grubby product as no other candy is ever enjoyed.

White Taffy

4 cups sugar
1 cup boiling water
2 tablespoons vinegar
2 tablespoons butter

Stir until the sugar is dissolved. Boil until it cracks (250 degrees Fahrenheit). Pour into a well-greased pan, cool quickly and as soon as it is cool enough to handle pull until white. Cut in pieces and wrap in oiled paper.

Butter Scotch

1 cup sugar
1 cup molasses
1 tablespoon vinegar
2 tablespoons butter

Mix the ingredients, stir over the fire until dissolved. Boil without stirring until when tried in water it is brittle (268 degrees Fahrenheit). Pour into well-greased pans and when it begins to harden mark into squares.

Fudge

2 squares chocolate
½ cup cold water
2 cups granulated sugar
⅔ cup milk
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon vanilla

Place the cut-up chocolate and cold water in a smooth, unburned saucepan. Stir over low fire till chocolate is melted. Remove from fire and stir until smooth. Stir in sugar gradually and add milk. Then stir over fire until sugar is dissolved. Boil over medium flame until it reaches 228 degrees Fahrenheit, or until a soft ball will form when a teaspoonful of the sirup is dropped in cold water. When testing remove the pan from flame. When test is obtained add butter and vanilla. Put pan in cold water to cool for about two minutes until the mixture begins to stick to the bottom of the pan. Remove pan. Beat until it begins to thicken and lose its shine. Pour at once on a damp cake pan. Greasing is unnecessary.

Eggs Found in Garden Hatch Copperhead Snakes

Hagerstown, Md.—Mrs. William Eavey, of Trego, will take greater care when she finds eggs in her garden hereafter.

She found 25 eggs that she believed were turtle eggs while working in her garden several weeks ago. She gave three to Dale Gams, Rohrersville. Gams put them in a jar, and two copperhead snakes hatched out.

Artist Uses Beer to Mix His Paint

New Orleans.—"Beer colors," the only two known to exist, are now offered to New Orleans' alcoholic art lovers.

Two paintings, thirty-five years old, hang in the art department of Tulane university. The artist, Ellsworth Woodward, used Mexican beer instead of water to mix the paints, and the colors are better preserved than the average water color of that age.

Woodward used beer because he could not obtain suitable water in the Mexican mountains where the sketches were made.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

"Tom, Dick and Harry"

"THE origin of the expression "Tom, Dick and Harry" used as a generalization to indicate any and every young man, traces back through literature and common usage which it has had a unique development. It started as "Tom and Richard," of which we find recorded usage as far back as 1588. Shakespeare used it as "Tom, Dick and Francis," which was published in 1598, written probably in 1590. By 1606 we find the expression "Tom and Tib" used in the same way. And in the old Farmer's Almanac, Boston, dating 1815, we find it used as we use it today, the phrase "Tom, Dick and Harry."

EVERYONE MUST HELP

Not another winter like the last! That was the pledge of the new administration when it came into office. And every effort is being given to achieve it. It represents the most earnest hope of every citizen.

But government alone can't do it all. We can spend money for relief—tnd we are, but there is never enough. We can build public works—but there comes an end to that, and the public treasury is not bottomless. A large share of any kind of real effort must be borne by the individual citizen.

This does not mean charity, vital as that is. The best kind of relief is that which spends money and provides jobs on projects which are permanently valuable, and gives to those who pay the bill something really needed. That is true whether the work is done by the Federal government or the state, or John Jones down the street.

A dollar spent for a new house, or to repair an old one, does double duty. An extremely large share of it goes directly to labor in your own town. The rest of it goes to various industries, through numerous pockets. It touches many states and communities. It is always growing—and by the time it has run its course it has done the work of fifty or one hundred dollars.

Remember that, and remember, too, that you have a selfish interest in building and repairing while prices are still in the economic basement.

GOLD AND EMPLOYMENT

The President's recent announcement on gold, in which he pledged the government to offer a market at the world price for as much of the yellow metal as is offered to it, will undoubtedly have a salutary effect on this country. The purpose of the plan as affecting currency and credit expansion is of only academic interest to most of us. It's effect will doubtless be an important expansion of mining activities, both here and abroad. Gold is like everything else—the wider and more profitable the market, the more effort will be given to finding and developing the product.

Thousands of men will find new work in the mining industry. Thousands of families will receive their livelihood because of it. And millions of dollars will be put in circulation, to surge through the veins of industry and speed the work of recovery.

"The eagle suffers little birds to sing," says Shakespeare. But that was before the day of the Blue Eagle.

MODERN EDUCATION

In a series of articles, Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, discusses some of the laws which he belives underlie a thorough modern education. Coming from such a distinguished source, they are worthy of serious consideration.

Among the principles set forth are these: We learn by action rather than by absorption; learning is specific rather than general; the best things to study are those which are important to our life and work; we should study the things that will most directly contribute to our efficiency and happiness.

Like many other progressive educators of the present day, Dr. Frank does not believe that a college education is either necessary or desirable for everyone. The four years spent in college might often be better employed in gaining practical experience in a workshop or in business. It depends largely on the natural talents and inclinations of a young person whether he should go to college.

For one who has a studious disposition and aspires to enter one of the learned professions, a college education is indispensable, of course. For those who go to college merely to be able to say that they have gone to college is a waste of valuable time.

As Dr. Frank very truthfully says: "We cannot prove that a college education guarantees a big income, or that it makes us happier men or women. Most of the old arguments for college education are in the ashcan."

THE BATTLE AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT

The President's Re-employment Agreement did vastly more than hasten absorption of several million of the unemployed. It also was a strong incentive to industry to maintain more efficient and less wasteful management in order to meet increased labor costs. Furthermore, it encouraged the great majority of intelligent industrial managements to enter into the work of formulating codes of fair competition with a genuine spirit of co-operation with the Government, based upon several weeks of observation of what the National Industrial Recovery Act actually has done for them.

There are disclosures at the code hearings in Washington indicative of the eagerness with which men and women went back to work after many despairing months. And of the sometimes amazing improvement in morale throughout big plants these long-idle workers brought with them. It appears there is a decided air of alacrity in big American industrial establishments these days. Considerable reduction in hours of work per week has resulted in considerable improvement in the extent and quality of the output, and especially of quality. As was to be expected, the new workers are very willing workers.

OLD FIRMS' NEW LINES

If it be true that politics makes strange bedfellows, it is equally true that something similar may be said of business, in the light of recent happenings.

Manufacturers of various commodities are adding lines apparently unrelated to their original products, some of the new combinations being almost incongruous at first glance. For illustration:

A big automobile manufacturing concern has added refrigerators and radio sets, a yeast company takes on coffee as a companion product, an old sewing machine firm brings out a vacuum cleaner, while two piano manufacturers are also building motorboats.

Perhaps these firms, as well as others making similar departures from their original lines, have an explanation for their new activities mentioned, each logical enough from the standpoint of the company concerned.

The general idea is believed to be that by making two or more products a manufacturer is better enabled to cope with seasonal slumps, and in many cases to keep working forces on a more uniform schedule of employment. Whatever the explanation, the new trend is interesting, and seems likely to spread to many other lines of manufacturing and marketing.

THE HITCH HIKERS

After about four years of operation the Maine law against hitch hiking is declared effective and beneficial by the chief of the state's highway police, although not a single prosecution has been necessary.

The law forbids any person on a public highway to "endeavor by words, gestures or otherwise to beg or secure transportation in any motor vehicle not engaged in carrying passengers for hire, unless said person knows the driver thereof or any passenger therein." An exception is made in case of sickness of an emergency nature. The maximum punishment for a violation of the law is a fine of $50 or thirty days in jail.

Hitch hikers are a nuisance to motorists, and many cases are on record in which persons soliciting a lift have robbed and even murdered those who thus befriended them. On the other hand, most kindly disposed persons would willingly give an honest pedestrian a ride, if there were any way to distinguish him from the other kind.

In this matter, as in so many others, a vicious minority seems to make necessary a law which imposes a hardship on those who have no wrong intentions. Law or no law, it is safer not to pick up the unknown hitch hiker.

LABOR VS. COMMUNISM

No immediate menace of communism threatens the United States, in the opinion of Congressman Fish of New York, chairman of the House committee which investigated activities of communists in this country. He states, however, that it is important for the government to keep informed concerning what the Reds are doing, so as to be prepared to meet any situation which may arise.

In a recent speech, Mr. Fish took occasion to pay a tribute of praise to American labor leaders and members of labor unions for their stand on communism. He said:

"The most poent force against the extension of revolutionary communism in the United States is the American Federation of Labor, and the patriotic leadership of both Samuel Gompers and William Green has stood boldly against the attempts of communists to undermine the faith of our wage-earners in our form of government and in our free institutions. The entire American people owe a debt of gratitude to the American Federation of Labor for not compromising with communism and for waging a relentless war against it wherever it shows its vicious and disloyal fang."

While communists in the United States are relatively few, they are very active, and lose no opportunity to foster class hatred, with the object of ultimately fomenting a civil war, whereby they hope to destroy our form of government.

In this they will hardly succeed, but they can make a lot of trouble, and for that reason should be closely watched.

Irate farmers cast 1,000 pounds of butter in a Wisconsin creek. We have read in the Good Book about casting bread upon the waters, but nothing about its being buttered.

Get Up Nights?

Make This 25c Test

Lax the bladder as you would the bowels. Drive out impurities and excessive acids that cause irritation, burning and frequent desire. Get a 25 cent box of BU-KETS, the bladder laxative, from any drug store. After four days if you are not relieved of getting up nights, go back and get your money. BU-KETS, containing buchu leaves, juniper oil, etc., acts pleasantly and effectively on the bladder similar to castor oil on the bowels. If you are bothered with backache, or leg pains caused from bladder disorders, you are bound to feel better after this cleansing and you get your regular sleep. McGraw's Pharmacy says B-KETS in a best seller.

SIDELIGHTS

A Brooklyn bachelor, living in an apartment, thinks the morning setting-up program is the best radio feature. Asked if he took part in them, he admitted that he did not, but confided that the lady living just across the court did, with the window shades not drawn.

Baseball fans are again speculating over what, if anything, is going to happen to Babe Ruth next season. The Babe himself is quoted as saying: "I will make no decision about retiring from baseball until I am convinced I can no longer play. I hope to play next year. I believe I will be able to—so, for the present at least I am not retiring from baseball."

Karl Lundberg found the right girl on the wrong boat when he tried to sail from Honolulu to San Francisco, only to find that by mistake he had boarded a ship bound for Alaska. All ended well, however, and the girl, then Miss Marie Benzet, whom he met and wooed on his unpremeditated Alaskan voyage, is now Mrs. Lundberg.

An unusual sanctuary is the mission home at Kongolo in the Belgian Congo, Africa. Here native brides, some very young, may obtain refuge when they run away from undesirable husbands to whom they have been sold by their parents, but the mission refunds the purchase price to the deserted husband. If the girl later finds a man she really wants to marry, he can have her by reimbursing the mission. More than 600 girls have passed through the mission in this way in the seven years of its existence.

In the annual selection of most valuable big league ball players by sports writers recently resulted in the choice of Jimmy Fox of the Athletics for the American, and Carl Hubbell of the Giants for the Nationals. Hubbell pitched two full games for his team in the 1933 world's series and won them both.

It is told of the late William L. Veeck, president of the Chicago Cubs, from 1919 until his recent death, that he got into that position in a rather unusual maner. He was a Wrigley unmercifully daily because of the Cubs 'poor showing. Exasperated, Wrigley sarcastically asked Veeck if he thought he could do better. Veeck said yes, and was given the job. During his connection with the Cubs he won two pennants, but lost both world's series, 1929 and 1932.

Rev. John Haynes Holmes, the noted liberal preacher of New York, suggests a code for churches, urging among other things "abolition of cut-throat competition" among varius denominations. He advises the churches to accept the data of sciences, to oppose war and fight poverty.

Clyde Beatty of Hagenbeck Wallace circus is generally conceded to be the world's greatest lion and tiger tamer. He got married the other day, which prompts the Dothan Eagle to class him also as a great optimist and remarks that we now will see if he really knows his business.

Lloyds of London, who write insurance or lay wagers on anything, are reported to be offering odds of two to one that another European war will begin within eighteen months. We hope Lloyds' wrong, but if right we hope Uncle Sam will have good sense to stay out of it. Making the world safe for something once is quite enough. It seems that in the last war we made it safest for dictators.

The illusory nature of fame is again brought to mind by the recent death of a world-famous American-born painter, Cecile de Wentworth. Her paintings hang in the Vatican Museum in Rome. in the Luxembourgh of Paris and in the Metropolitan in New York. For her portrait of Pope Leo XIII she was made a papal marchesa, and she was the second woman painter to hold the French Legion of Honor Cross. She died in poverty at the municipal hospital in Nice, France, at the age of 80.

Returning from a visit to Doorn, Holland, President von Kleinsmid of the University of Southern California declared that the former German Kaiser was enthusiastic about President Roosevelt and the NRA. Some will wonder whether Wilhelm's endorsement should be considered a boost or a knock.

When the spitball was banned by the major baseball leagues in 1920 the 18 pitchers then using the slippery delivery were allowed to continue, but no new ones were permited to adopt it. Now only two of the 18 are still in the big leagues, Burleigh Grimes of the Cardinals and Urban Faber of the White Sox.

Self-adjusting so that the user may sit and work without the feet becoming numb or tired, a new foot-rest is being offered for home, hospital and school.

SEQUOIA PARK EVER ALLURING

The Sequoia National Park had its first real storm of the season on October 30-31 when 2.10 inches of rain and snow fell at Giant Forest. Since then the weather has been clear, crisp and cool, with a full moon shining at night, according to a report received by National Automobile Club. A maximum tempertature of 66 and a minimum of 30 were recorded this week.

The autumnal scenery is still gorgeous with the brilliant coloring of the dogwood and other broadleaf trees and shrubs contrasting with the shining sombre green of the conifers; the snow capped Sierra peaks in the background and the clear atmosphere permitting magnificent panoramas in all directions from roads and vantage points.

Roads are in generally excellent condition. All approach highways are paved and good, with no new construction under way near the Park.

Anecdotes concerning the late Florenz Ziegfeld are still frequently told. One is concerning how he was fooled by Sally Long of the Follies, when he bought a policy for $100,000 to insure that she would not get married. It later developed that Sally had already married secretly at the age of 15, and was the mother of two children at the time the policy was written.

Extremely old people are often asked to explain how they happened to live so long. Some attribute their longevity to either the use or the abstinence from tobacco and whisky; some are vegetarians, while others eat much meat, and so on. And old darky gives what is perhaps as good an explanation as any. He explains his great age by the fact that he "was born so far back."

SYNOPSIS

In a mood of disappointment, through her inability, due to the selfishness of her family, to put finishing touches to her costume for a long-anticipated country dance, Anne Chamberlain is irritated by the stolidity and lack of imagination displayed by her escort, George Hildreth (points he shares with most of her acquaintances). A visitor in the community, Neal Conrad, young lawyer, is to be the "sensation" of the evening, and Hildreth is vaguely jealous.

"I've an extra one," cheerfully volunteered Austin's younger brother, Thomas, who had joined the group. "That's right, let's start all over again. I want the Schottish, Anne, there's no one dances it so good as you. And the Portland Fancy. And the second waltz— Hello, Roy."

"Hello yourself. Hello, Anne."

"Oh, Roy, I'm ever so glad to see you! It's ages since you've been down."

"I know. But I've been awfully busy. Say, what have you got for a feller?"

"There doesn't seem to be much left but a 'Paul Jones.'"

"Shucks! Well, I'll take that, and how about the first extra?"

"Fine."

"I've got a friend here, I want him to meet you."

"I'd love to."

"I'll get him right away—"

But the Wallacetown band had begun to play the strains of the opening waltz. Even Anne's independence of spirit did not permit her to question George's right to that, without an instant's delay. She rose, shaking down her skirts, and thrusting her program into her sash, slipped into his arms. But she smiled back at the deserted group over her shoulder. She was perfectly satisfied. Roy, she knew, would not forget.

CHAPTER II

The second dance was the "Paul Jones," and Roy came promptly to Anne's side as soon as the music for it began. Roy was not especially popular, being branded as "stuck up." He had gone to Harvard, and had graduated from the law school there as well as completing his academic course with considerable success. He was an only child, and had inherited a comfortable fortune from his father, a prosperous hardware dealer, who had been immensely proud of him, and had wanted him to have "advantages." It was owing to his father's death that he had returned to Wallacetown, and settled there to practice, in order that his mother, who was too old to be uprooted from her native element, need not be left alone. He was a good son, and a good citizen, and he was rapidly proving himself to be a good lawyer. But he was insignificant-looking, slightly built and anemic. He lisped a little. Anne liked him, because he lent her books, and talked with her about the glimpses of the great world which he had had. And he liked Anne, recognizing her beauty and brains and spirit. But she did not stir his senses, and he felt himself slightly above her, though he was careful—more careful than he was toward many other persons—not to let her see this. The Chamberlains were a "shiftless lot" and the thrifty Griffins looked down upon all such. It did not occur to them that good could come out of Nazareth.

Into the Griffins' well-ordered household, Neal Conrad burst without warning. He was "motoring through" to see some wealthy clients of his own, who were spending the summer in the mountains, and "simply had to see good old Roy." When they recovered from the first shock of his unheralded arrival, and the further shock of the discovery that he intended to spend several days with them, they accepted his presence with a mild joy and a satisfaction that was by no means mild. Neal "had a way with him," and he "was making a name for himself." This important combination was difficult to resist; after he had gone, it would be agreeable to refer to him, casually but frequently, in conversation with the neighbors.

Roy had meant to tell Anne something about his guest as they twirled about together; but the whistle blew for the forming of the ring before they had had time to exchange a dozen words, and they immediately lost sight of each other in the maze of the "grand right and left." When the whistle blew for the second time, Anne found herself facing a stranger; sensed, instinctively, who it must be, and was caught up swiftly and swung into a quick-step without the exchange of a word.

It was only a minute, of course, before the man spoke to her. But in that minute she became crowdingly conscious of a number of strange sensations. He was so startlingly different from any of the men she knew. His hair-cut was different, and his collar, and his tie, the shape of his blue serge coat, the texture of his spotless white trousers. He had a square jaw and square shoulders; and he held her so easily, yet so firmly—so closely. He did not seem in the least concerned because they had never met, or at a loss to know how to talk to her.

"What fun this kind of a dance is! Gets every one acquainted, the very first thing—I'm Neal Conrad, a friend of Roy Griffin's—I'm visiting him."

"I—I thought you must be Neal Conrad. I've known Roy a long time. He promised to introduce you to me."

"Well, I should hope so! I'd be terribly disappointed if he didn't."

"But there wasn't time before the party began," Anne went on, completing her sentence as she had intended before this astonishing person interrupted her.

"We must make up for lost time now then—darn it! There goes that whistle!"

"You said this kind of a dance was great fun!" exclaimed Anne, laughing lightly.

"Well, I've changed my mind. It's a darned poor kind of a dance. We were just getting nicely started—but I'll see you later."

The grand right and left had already begun again. They took their places in it tardily, and Anne, at least, self-consciously. It was accounted nothing short of a crime to hold it up, and she knew it. George, as she approached him, showed a face as black as a thunder cloud. When the "Paul Jones" ended, she admitted that she was thirsty and turned with him to the lemonade table.

Neal Conrad meanwhile had sought out his host without delay, and taken him impatiently aside.

"Who's that girl I danced with the first time the whistle blew? I didn't even have time to get her name. She said she'd known you a long time and that you had promised to present me. I wish you'd hurry up and do it."

"I've known all the girls here a long time, and I've promised all of them that I'd introduce you to them. You're the event of the evening."

"This girl," continued Neal, "had on an awful pink dress trimmed with black velvet bows, and she'd been using cheap perfumery. But she danced like a featherweight angel, and she was a raving, tearing beauty. You don't often see a blond with any pep, but she had it. Now, do you know whom I mean?"

"I've known whom you meant all along," lisped Roy, enjoying his little joke. "It's Anne Chamberlain. She's over there by the table now, drinking lemonade."

"Come on," said Neal briefly.

The necessary formalities consumed very little time. At the end of them Neal asked to see Anne's program.

"I'm awfully sorry. It's all filled."

"Nonsense!"

"It is really," she said, blushing.

"Anne's program is always filled," her partner corroborated.

"But I wish it wasn't," she added, blushing more deeply still.

There was not the slightest doubt of her sincerity. Neal regarded her with amusement.

"What shall we do about it?" he asked.

"I don't know."

"Well, I do. I'm going to ask the band to add two more extras. And they'll both be mine. Don't forget."

"I shan't," said Anne ecstatically.

"What do you usually do during the intermission?"

"Why—I wait for it to be over."

"Of course. But where?"

"Right here," she replied with growing bewilderment.

"The worst place you could think of. Why don't you come and sit it out with me in my motor?"

"Where?"

"In my motor. The horseless carriage, you know."

Anne hesitated. Such a suggestion had certainly never been made in Hamstead before, because it was the first time that anyone had stopped there with a horseless carriage. Therefore she had no precedent for either accepting or declining the invitation. But she knew perfectly well that local etiquette demanded she should refuse.

"Fine," said Neal heartily, quite as if she had given him a swiftly affirmative answer. "I'll come for you. Now I must go and speak to the band."

The first of the extras, which, without the slightest apparent difficulty, he succeeded in persuading the band to interpolate, came just before the intermission. It was a waltz—"The Beautiful Blue Danube." Anne had never heard it before, and when she asked Neal its name, he looked at her again with unconcealed amusement as he told her.

"It was written by quite a famous Austrian composer—Strauss. The best thing he ever did. Listen to it, don't talk, and dance it. If you've never waltzed to it before, you don't know what dancing can be."

She had never known before what dancing could be! That was true enough, whatever the music was, far truer than he guessed. Or did he guess? She hoped he did not—feared he did—then longed to tell him so herself. But she was speechless. A silence no less insidious than the sensuous strains of the singing melody bound her. She could not break it, not even when, at the last lingering bars, his encircling arm tightened for an instant and then relaxed its hold, and she felt his fingers on her bare elbow, guiding her lightly.

"Out this way. To the left, under those maple trees. Let me help you. The seat is rather high."

(What was the magic in those strong, white hands, so different from any hands that had ever touched her before?)

"Do you mind if I smoke?"

"No."

The Bird of the Hour

Because of Thy Great Bounty

by GRACE NOLL CROWELL
in Federal Council Bulletin

BECAUSE I have been given much,
I, too, shall give;
Because of Thy great bounty, Lord,
Each day I live
I shall divide my gifts from Thee
With every brother that I see
Who has the need of help from me.

Because I have been sheltered, fed,
By Thy good care,
I can not see another's lack
And I not share
My glowing fire, my loaf of bread,
My roof's shelter overhead,
That, he, too, may be comforted.

Because love has been lavished so
Upon me, Lord,
A wealth I know that was not meant
For me to hoard,
I shall give love to those in need,
The cold and hungry clothe and feed,
Thus shall I show my thanks indeed.

Turkey with Trimmings

by Katherine Edelman

THINGS had been going rather badly with the Hamptons the past few months. It was true no great calamity or sorrow had befallen them, but just a series of petty annoyances and worries had cropped up almost daily—the kind of things that gnaw and eat away the roots of the tree of happiness and content.

This morning they had almost quarreled before Arthur left because Janet had decided that they would not have a turkey for Thanksgiving. Arthur believed, and rightly so, that a turkey with all the trimmings was a part of

He Paused Long Enough at the Door to Call Back.

Thanksgiving itself if one could afford it, but Janet insisted that a chicken would do them just as well: "What's the use of spending ten dollars or more for a dinner when we can get one that will do just as well for less than five?" she had argued, and finally Arthur let her have her way, but he paused long enough at the door when leaving to call back: "Looks as if we could live like real folks on Thanksgiving day at least."

After he had gone Janet sat in deep thought—his parting remark had stung her deeply. How could he talk like that after all she had done—all the sacrifices that she had made so that things would be easier for him in the future! Then it suddenly dawned upon her that a great many of the worries that had annoyed and upset them of late were mostly of her making. Looking back over their five years of married life she saw that it was this penurious trait of hers that had been accountable for most of the trials that had beset their path. Coming from a home where every penny counted, she had found it hard to spend two dollars where one would do if one only skimped enough. John had tried to reason it out with her many times, explaining to her that he would be the last man in the world to urge her to live beyond their means, but, since they were in a position to do so without endangering their future, he would like to live better than they did. There was a generous nest-egg in the bank and a goodly sum in life insurance should he be taken, so, why, he had often reasoned, couldn't they enjoy a good show or dinner when they felt like it?

Now, in the light of the awakening that had come to her, Janet saw that she had been unjust to Arthur. It was true, she told herself, that she had been doing all the saving and skimping for his sake, but she realized now that she had been robbing him of many joys that were his right, and, perhaps, keeping him back in his profession—keeping him from rising beyond a certain level. She knew, too, that in cheating him she had also cheated herself and made the way hard, but it was of Arthur she was especially thinking. But joy came to her at the thought that it was not too late to make amends.

And on Thanksgiving there was a large turkey on the table, with all the trimmings that anyone could crave, and Janet had invited a few of the people that she knew Arthur liked best to share the feast with them.

"CA C'EST PARIS," said Peter, flinging open the window of the bridal suite in the Continental hotel. "In other words," he added, performing that trick with his hat which made all London laugh, "so this is Paris, eh? And here begins the honeymoon which we'll remember all our lives."

"Yes," said Pansy, who, having been in the same musical play for a little over two years, was obliged to force a smile. "It's going to be wonderful."

With a boyish air of off-stage pride at being a man of wealth he slapped the place in which he kept his pocketbook—and nearly uttered a scream. The smart new leather case, on which there were the initials of his comic though actual name, was no longer there. In it had been every cent of his money, the money which he had saved by dint of gruesome economy so that he might give his tiny wife a gorgeous honeymoon. Either it had been stolen by a peculiarly heartless bandit or he had dropped it in the cab. If the first he would be marked down forever by the shrewd and careful Pansy as an irresponsible; if the second he would hear the story of his gross stupidity until he doddered to the grave. Something had to be done. Something which would get him out of this most frightful hole. He had no father upon whom to draw, no friends to lend him money, nothing that he could sell. He was in a foreign city in which no one knew his name. There was not a living creature to whom he could appeal.

"What's the matter, dear? Still feeling a wee bit giddy after that tossing on the sea?" A little thing she was, with amazingly small bones, baby eyes and a round face, a very kissable mouth and something that passed for a nose. Noticeably and charmingly pretty, with the fine emergency manner that goes with a Red Cross nurse.

"The least little bit," he said, giving a beautiful imitation of a land lubber walking a tilting deck. "What you need," he thought in anguish, "is time. You must earn, borrow or steal money before Pansy knows of his. You must make her blissfully unconscious with one of your sleeping drafts." In a medical voice he spoke. "Dearie, I think you ought to lie down. All this excitement calls for quiet and rest. You don't look frightfully well."

She had felt all right, though tired, half a minute ago. But nothing is so instantly calculated to make one feel unwell as to be told that one looks so in a sympathetic way. "Bed has a lovely sound," she said. "I will lie down for a bit."

And so he mixed the dose, a big one, said that it was bicarbonate of soda, and hoped that she would go to sleep for fourteen hours at least. A good little man was Peter, wiry and well-built; not much more than five feet six on a brick; very smartly dressed. Nature, who had endowed him with every comedian's trick, had very usefully provided him with a tragic face. Usefully, because thus it instantly awoke the laughter of the crowd.

With a monocle screwed in his eye he kissed his charming bride and left her lying in bed with the clothes about her ears. What was he to do? Like a man who drops eight thousand feet in a faulty parachute he went into the passage and walked downstairs. Much life was going on. People arrived and departed. The inevitable crowd of inquirers surged round the concierge. A queue of eager women booked seats to see the French plays that were better left unseen. Lonely men whose wives were shopping had tea at marble-topped tables in the wide courtyard. Behind three tempting martinis were three young and good-looking Americans to whom Paris was a dream. And there, alone and desperate, the tragic little comic without a single cent. He had read in daily papers of hold-ups in the streets, of men who stuck a gun into people's terrified ribs, collected all their money and went off at a run. But Peter hadn't and never had had, a gun. He simply hated guns. And so he took his growing headache into the busy, chattering streets and was clapped on the back by a cordial creature who said, "You! By gum, what luck!" He was English and very well dressed. He wore the affluent and joyous air of an extremely wealthy business man in Paris without his wife.

Peter didn't know him, but he said to himself, with excitement and a great spasm of hope, "He has seen me in 'The Powdered Lady' or 'The Girl on the Motor Bike.' I must have made him laugh! He's the sail on the horizon. I can touch him for a bit." He agreed to wet his throat. He could do with a well-mixed Side-car or a gurgle of vermouth.

He found himself sitting on a high stool in the nearest American bar. And there he sat for an hour, in higher and higher spirits, with his kind and cordial friend. The number of their Side-cars would have made a traffic jam. Finally, having come to that subtle moment when he felt that a touch could be made, he turned to his providential companion and laid his hand on his knee.

"It's too long a story," he said, "and almost too impossible as to why I'm out of cash, but if you will lend—"

He got no further than that. By an extraordinary process of elimination the man had disappeared. Peter was wholly alone, faced with the dire necessity of paying for all those drinks. And this, with one horrified look at the barman's pugilistic fist, he did by placing on the counter one gold link from his cuff. He said, steadying the tremble in his voice, "Take it out of that. I'll look in for the balance tomorrow about twelve." Climbing down from the high stool he tottered into the street. He was followed by a growl. Among the jostling crowd of the city he felt like a pet canary which had flown away from its cage.

But at the instant that he was tempted to throw himself under a car and let life and his ghastly crisis squash him as flat as a frog, he spied the well-known figure of a London theatrical agent on the other side of the street. "Lockett!" he shouted, ignoring the screech of blasphemy and brakes. "Lockett, my dear old pal."

Having been on the stage himself though never able to act, Lockett recognized Peter with theatrical surprise, "Upon my word, it's Peter! What are you doing here?"

Peter gave his hat a tilt, touched his tie with a loving finger and walked all around his stick. "Honeymoon, old boy," he said, "just dashed over the pond." He was happy again. His spirits went up like a cork from a bottle of high champagne. In his old friend Lockett to whom in his early days he had paid fees for several engagements was the needed patch of blue sky in that dark mass of cloud. After a burst of "shop" he drew up short and backed his friend into the doorway of a store. "Percy, old boy," he said, "you're going to save my life and my future happiness with Pansy, who is indeed my life." There was a tremble in his voice.

"Oh," said Lockett, "how's that?" He wore the expression that comes into a man's face when he sees the approach of a "touch."

Peter told his story in the shortest number of words, adding with perfect confidence, "And so you will lend me a hundred pounds. That goes without saying, of course. I'll give you an I. O. U. and pay interest at the rate of—"

A hand fell on his back, a large and hearty hand. And at the moment of its impact there was a roar of mirth. "I always said you were the funniest man on earth," said Lockett. He dived across the street.

Peter dropped his stick, his old and reliable prop. "This is the end," he said. He turned dismally into the archway of that huge and expensive hotel from which he and his darling Pansy were going quickly to be chucked, groped his way through a fog of humiliation, and plodded up to the fourth floor, forgetting such a thing as an elevator, with a wobble in his knees. He must confess his ghastly pickle to dear little Pansy as soon as she woke up.

As he appeared in the bedroom something fat and bulgy hit him in the face.

"Your dose worked like a charm, old dear. I've slept in one long piece. Oh, and here's your nice new pocketbook. You gave it to me to carry after you had paid the cab."

And as Peter did one of his best and most mirth-provoking exits back into the sitting room through what appeared to be a blinding glare of sun, tears of gratitude—scalding tears—trickled down his nose.

Arctic's Crusoe Builds Igloos for the Eskimos

A strange Robinson Crusoe who lives on the shores of the Polar sea is recalled by Alfred M. Bailey of the Chicago Academy of Sciences in some Alaskan reminiscences appearing in Natural History published by the American Museum of Natural History.

In early August, when King Heat still holds sway beneath the Arctic circle, the advance forces of King Boreas begin to cover the Arctic sea with thick slabs of ice. Crashing this steadily increasing ice barrage, the Coast Guard Cutter Bear fights its way to Demorcation Point, on its last survey of the season. As the Bear probes its way through low-hanging clouds a shot is heard. The ship comes to a swift stop; presently a whaleboat creeps out of the murk.

"It proved to contain a bunch of natives and a chap named Lowen, who was dressed in skins of the mountain sheep," writes Mr. Bailey, and continues: "Lowen had been living along that part of the coast for seven years and was now desirous of a little 'white man's grub' in exchange for skins of the Arctic fox. He was a rather unique character who whiled away the monotonous hours by building igloos along the coast, a practice which the natives soon learned to take advantage of, by following him and taking possession as soon as he abandoned them."

Spiders First Aviators

Although wingless, spiders can take to the air and reach distant places. Nature has endowed them with the capacity of "balloon" building and given them such remarkable instincts for using these airships that few winged creatures can surpass their flying feats, says a writer in the National Geographic Magazine. Spiders were navigating the skies just as they do today millions of years before man invented the gas-filled silk bag with which he first soared above the earth. The spider's balloon, like man's, is of silk; but, much simpler—it needs no gas. When its filmy threads are let out they catch the upward currents of air, and thus carry away the tiny aviator. Some spiders, by taking advantage of trade winds, have floated out over oceans and reached islands hundreds of miles from any continental shore.

THE PROBLEM OF ADULT EDUCATION

During the last school year 316,000 California adults, seeking to improve themselves educationally and to better their citizenship, enrolled in special day and evening high school classes. This figure represents an increase in attendance in adult education classes during the last six years of over 300 per cent, or from an attendance of 49,000 in 1925-1926 to the present figures of 316,000.

As attendance has increased costs have increased, so that last year the adult phase of California's educational system represented over two million dollars. As with all other phases of public expenditure, the schools have, during the period of depression, come in for critical review, considerable discussion centering on the problem of adult education and its cost.

In a comprehensive analysis of the entire subject of adult education, Dr. Elmer H. Stafflebach, professor of education at the San Jose State Teachers' College and eminent research scholar, writing in the November issue of the Sierra Educational News, comes to the following conclusion:

"Any planned educational program will have to place a primary dependence upon the education of childhood and youth. Nevertheless, the education of adults will always be a necessary part of such a program. Education of childhood and youth, which antedates the time of contact with social control by a quarter of a century, cannot be sufficient to meet the requirements of a changing society.

"The future cannot be entirely foreseen. Unexpected problems are bound to arise. The only social insurance against such unexpected conditions is a well trained body of citizens, educated in mind and purpose to meet emergencies, and a program of adult education designed as a continuous aid to the citizen body in the working out of current social problems."

Until very recent times adult education in this country has been largely left to private enterprise, the American public school growing up under the theory that free education furnished by the public was only for the childhood and youth of the land. Largely since the World war, however, the American people, particularly in certain states such as California, are beginning to take a new view with regard to the education of adults.

The old theory that if an adult citizen wishes to improve his education he should pay the costs is being given up as socially short-sighted, its place being taken by the broader view that whatever brings legitimate benefits to the individual will result in consequent benefits to society, and that therefore adult training becomes an obligation upon society.

"Adult education," declares Dr. Stafflebach, "represents a great cooperative effort on the part of the members of society to improve the general conditions of American social life in the present generation. Its purpose is the achievement of increased mental and bodily vigor, greater social mindedness, and improved moral character among the American citien body without waiting for the arrival of the coming generation."

Red Cross Campaign Ends Thanksgiving Day

"A Red Cross reunion." That's the atmosphere pervading the nation today as thousands of volunteers enroll Red Cross members in a campaign that will continue until Thanksgiving Day.

James L. Fieser, vice-chairman in charge of domestic operations, in a message to A. L. Shafter, Red Cross manager in the Pacific Area, says to the people of the Pacific slope:

"The spirit of sixteen regional conferences in thirteen different states which I have just attended can best be illustrated by a few scattered instances in a great number which came to my notice. Five delegrates drove 500 miles from Coeur d'Alene to the Idaho state regional conference at Boise. Others drove as far from Northern California to Sacramento, and from Apache county to Phoenix, Arizona. These evidences of loyalty to the Red Cross are not exceptional.

"At one of the northwestern regional conferences a man said that he knew of nothing which warmed his heart (during the subzero nights of a long winter) as he pushed his way over the snow to a far off destination, as to come up to a ranch house in the window of which the Red Cross emblem shone as it was framed in the yellow glow from a kerosene lamp. It was a benediction to the lonely traveler."

Five state governors made addresses before the Red Cross gatherings. Of the five governors, three had served as the chairman of Red Cross Chapters or branches. Seven state directors of emergency relief also paticipated with the thousands of Red Cross delegates in the regional conferences. Mr. Fieser concludes:

"The Red Cross is an Army of Mercy, for God and Country. It unites people of all faiths and beliefs and is a benediction to both the participant and the beneficiary."

A new battle cry for Red Cross membership is sounded by a Louisiana volunteer who says: "Ask them all."

Compliance With Fair Competition Code Urged

Public co-operation in securing compliance with N. R. A. Codes of Fair Competition is urged in a statement issued by E. Tilden Mattox, District Compliance Director.

According to Mr. Mattox, who was recently appointed by General Hugh S. Johnson, it is the duty of any person who has knowledge of facts that might constitute a code violation to report the same at once.

Many people, Mattox states, have been deterred from making complaints because of the fear that their names might be divluged. There is no basis for such fear, he says, as he has been instructed to keep the names of complainants strictly confidential. Consequently, employees who make bona fide complaints against establishments by which they are employed will not be jeopardizing their jobs.

As District Compliance Director, Mattox is in charge of code compliance enforcement for Northern California, Nevada and Utah. Many complaints have already been received at his office, located in Room 306, U. S. Custom House, San Francisco, and are being given personal attention.

A form for making complaints is available at any post office, and should be used in reporting violations. They should be completed in duplicate and notarized or signed by a subscribing witness who also has personal knowledge of the facts.

The office of the District Compliance Director is open to all, Mr. Mattox says, and every effort will be made to assist those who desire help in adjusting code problems.

Complaints against establishments for which no national code has yet been approved, but which have signed the President's re-employment agreement, are still being handled by the local N. R. A. compliance boards for the communities in which such establishments are conducting their businesses.

Scientists Responsible For Progress of Gas

In the earliest days of the gas industry those pioneers who devoted themselves exclusively to the manufacture of gas confined its application to lighting. This was quite natural, for light was at that time the most essential want of the people.

However, the possibility of gas being turned to account for other purposes, notably cooking and heating, occurred to scientists of that time and some experimental work was done. The practicability of gas cooking was demonstrated about 1832, and about eight years later various appliances for heating by gas were devised. In 1856 the forerunner of the late asbestos-backed stove was patented. Three years later gas heating stoves were used for the first time in the United States.

But, it is safe to say that not until gas as a lighting agent came to be practically supplanted by its youthful rival, electricity, did the busy brain of man come to the rescue of the gas industry and seriously exploit gas as a general fuel. It was an uphill fight against opposing fuels, but eventually gas forged its way to the front as the best and most reliable heating agent for home, office and factory. It's availability, its efficiency, its cleanliness, and the ease with which it could be controlled were points of recommendation that could not be ignored.

Then came natural gas to clinch the matter and definitely establish the supremacy of gas. Probably the biggest boon ever conferred upon householder or factory man was presented to Northern and Central California in 1930, when the Pacific Gas and Electric Company completed its long-cherished project for transmitting natural gas from the San Joaquin Valley oil fields to the bay of San Francisco. This was done at an expenditure of many millions, but the public was served. Here was a fuel of double the heating value of the artificial product; it stood to sense that it should prove correspondingly economical of use.

What was anticipated is now an established fact. For the home, as for the factory, natural gas as a heating agent has no rival. Where it is available, there is no dwelling of such type of construction that can not be successfully served by one of the many kinds of gas heating devices that are on the market. These run from central furnaces to floor furnaces and so to portable heaters, all efficient. Furthermore, they can be installed upon such terms as to suit the most modest household budget. Furnaces, too, which were originally constructed for coal or oil fuel can be converted to gas use by means of the conversion burner. It's all very simple and reliable to a degree.

The housewife whose domestic establishment is not already equipped with some heating installation will do well to start now and provide against the otherwise inevitable discomforts of the approaching winter. The gas companies maintain staffs of experts whose advice is always at the housewife's call, and no charge is made for their services.

Some old-timers remember when folks used to play mah jong and midget golf.

Another optimist is the fellow who eats chestnuts in the dark.

SPLINTERS

From the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard

VOLUME 6 FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1933 NUMBER 18

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Gray: "Did you fish with flies, on your vacation?"

Jay: "Did we fish with flies? Sure, we fished with them, and camped with them, and ate with them, and slept with them."

Landlady: "So that new boarder's found something fresh to complain about this morning?"

The Waitress: "No, ma'am, it's the eggs."

Don't wait until it's too late! Repair it when the trouble starts.

"Officer, you'd better lock me up. I just hit my wife over the head with a club."

"Did you kill her?"

"Naw. That's why I want to be locked up."

She woke up in the early hours of the morning and nudged her sleeping husband.

"Wilfred," she said in a hoarse whisper, "Wilfred, wake up! There's a mouse in the bedroom!"

"Well, what about it," he groaned.

"I can hear it squeaking!" she said fearfully.

"Well, do you want me to get out and oil it, or something?"

Aberdeen Coal—the Best in the West.

A minister in addressing his flock, began: "As I gaze about I see before me a great many shining faces."

Just then eighty-seven powder puffs came out.

The men who try to do something and fail are infinitely better than those who try to do nothing and succeed.

"Say, old man," he said, "I understand that you have Jones' rake? The neighbor nodded.

"Good," said the first. "If you'll let me borrow that occasionally, I'll let you use his roller whenever you may be wanting it."

Shingles, all grades and kinds.

"Haven't you asked father yet?" said the dentist's daughter to her sweetheart.

"Not yet. I meant to do it last night, but I lost courage again at the last moment and let him pull another tooth out."
